RE: Salvage Valuation - BMW 320d M Sport - Registration YE67 RNX

Good afternoon,

Thank you for your email regarding the salvage value applied within our report.

On review we would consider the salvage rate within our report as fair and reasonable considering the vehicle's value, the repair costs exceeding the vehicle value, and the salvage category applied. The third party rate will be based on their increased purchasing power and agreements with salvage agents, something the Claimant will not be privy to on the open market.

The third party insurer has no legal entitlement to the salvage of the vehicle, and it would be unreasonable for them to impose their salvage value. We have independently valued the salvage and, given the structural damage and the repair costs being over 95% of the vehicle value, we believe our value to be fair and reasonable.

We are only involved due to the negligence of the third party policyholder; for the third party to now impose their contracted salvage rates would be wholly unreasonable.

We confirm that we have no financial interest in the settlement of this claim and see no reason to deviate from our independent report.

Any issues, let us know.

Kind regards,

Collision Engineers Ltd
