Thanks Grant that's great,

On initial review I can see why the TPI would say this damage appears in consistent.

It appears that the Claimant's repairer has just included every mark to the left side of the vehicle.

The main area of damage to the Claimants vehicle appears to be the dent in the left quarter panel. I would say it appears 'possible' that this is accident related and 'could' have been caused by one of the door handles on the Defendant vehicle, however there is no way to know for 100% sure.

If you need a report from us to do an assessment of which damage we believe is likely to be related and also provide the appropriate consistency comments/additions, this would be £450 plus vat.

Cheers
Andy

Morning Andy

Further to previous email, client's own vehicle damage images attached.

I look forward to receipt of your opinion and quote for a report.

Kind regards, Grant

Morning Grant, hope you are well!

I can see repair documents for J44XNY and images of the TP vehicle, but I will need images of J44XNY to review this.

Are you able to obtain and send these over?

Thanks

Andy

Good Morning Andy

I have a case where my client's vehicle J44XNY was hit whilst parked however the third party insurer have obtained a damage inconsistency report.

The third party insurer have paid 1449.36- i believe this is broken down as 492.08 for hire based on 7 days and admin at EPD. The third party insurer have offered : 872.4 Labour - 5 hours based on your invoice £400.00 Parts -based on your estimate and invoice £227.00 Specialist charges - £100.00 VAT - £145.40 third party insurer have also paid 20 admin and engineers fee.

There is a large amount of repair costs in dispute. Could you advise me of your initial opinion and also the cost of your won damage inconsistency report as to which costings you would find to be accurate so that I may advise my client of costings?

Kind regards, Grant
